

ABSTRACT

The invention concerns a method of detecting a disease, for example cancer, by determining a change in the expression level of the A3 adenosine receptor as 5 compared to the expression level in a non-diseased control.